

Jacquetta Woods Melvin MPH, PA-C has over 13 years of experience on clinical interdisciplinary teams providing obstetrical and gynecological care. Her expertise includes surgical, ambulatory, and inpatient OB/GYN care. She completed her PA education at Howard University in 2008, and then completed her MPH at UNC Chapel Hill with a concentration in Maternal and Child Health in 2011. She is committed to PA education and mentorship, with over 10 years of experience in training medical and PA student learners through clinical and research preceptorship, small group facilitation, and lecturing. She is currently a faculty member at the Duke PA Program, within the Family Medicine and Community Health Department at the Duke School of Medicine. Prior to joining the faculty at Duke, she served as faculty at UNC Chapel Hill School of Medicine where she led the Benign Gynecology inpatient service and served as a clinical preceptor for UNC physician assistant and medical students.

She is the immediate past president of the Association of PA's in OB/GYN and is a member of NCAPA, AAPA, and the African Heritage PA Caucus (AHPAC).

Her special interests include preventative gynecological care, contraception, first trimester pregnancy care, racial health disparities in OBGYN care, and health policy advocacy for marginalized populations.
